WRITE IT AS YOU SEE IT: “Take a Breath”

by George Weinstein

Twenty-one individuals attended the creative writing workshop hosted by Bobbie Christmas on July 23. Only three club members signed up, which is a good news-bad news scenario. I'd hoped to interest more of our regulars in this activity, but we now have another large pool from which to attract writers and new friends. As ever, I want to broaden our membership with even more diversity and talent. A strong base of individuals who want to continue to improve their skills inspires the leadership to sign up the most helpful, inspirational speakers and give you the best value for your dues.

Before we undertake another busy term for The Atlanta Writers Club, let's rest a moment and find some deep shade. The temperature turned from balmy to brutal overnight. We now experience daily, sweaty reminders of how summer helped to give "Hotlanta" its nickname. Time to take a long breath before we plunge into another term of fascinating, challenging discussions on the art and business of writing.

You will find breath at the center of everything—not only life, but creativity as well. Some of us achieve our best writing under the gun; these adrenaline junkies benefit from greedy gulps of air while racing to beat a deadline. Others conjure poetry and craft their prose at a peaceful pace, one voluptuous breath at a time.

So take a moment, here at the start of this paragraph, to fill your lungs. Hold in your breath a moment. Swim in it. Let yourself descend to its depths. When you release the life-giving air, allow the molecules to drift toward the exit and permit them to linger like guests who are reluctant to leave a swell party. Remember to take these mindful breaths before you start a new project, while in the midst of creating scenes from the ether, and as a way to savor the end of that journey.

In the spirit of easing into our new term, the board has decided to forego the August 13 seminar on getting published. Cec Murphey will address the club at a later date, and then we'll reschedule his daylong presentation. However, for those of you with work in progress and a desire for feedback, we will continue to host the critique group at the Village Veranda in Alpharetta on August 10th and 24th. After all, I'm encouraging you to relax—not cease and desist altogether!

I wish you a restful August. May you soon realize your grandest and meekest ambitions.

FROM THE TIP OF MY PEN – A Writer's Tip of the Month:

“Compost” by Fran Stewart

I spent today helping a friend of mine build a two-section compost bin. In the process, I learned a lot about the way my mind works. Last night I sat down with a pencil and a paper napkin and sketched out the top and side views, so I'd know how I wanted it to go together, how many 2x6s we'd need, and where the nails went. This morning, although I started by looking at my sketch, I realized that I didn't need it. The compost bin was already built inside my head. I could see the finished product.

As a writer, I'd like to say that the process of writing is just as simple. Sketch out the general plot, list the characters, figure out their motivations, and see the finished result. Then simply write it. Right? Wrong.

The vital difference between a compost bin made of wood and wire and nails, and a novel made of paper and ink is that the people in the story have a way of hopping up from the outline and heading off into strange tangents, rather as if one were building with living kudzu that keeps springing new leaves or growing three feet before the next nail goes in. In Yellow as Legal Pads, my last book, I'd written three-fourths of it before I even knew who the dead body was. Unlike wood and nails, the kudzu-like characters have a way of surprising us.

When we build a compost pile, we need to layer green stuff (like grass clippings and cucumber peels) with brown stuff (like dead leaves, dirt, and coffee grounds). Then the earthworms go to work and the chemical action of decomposition heats up the pile. The result is amazingly fertile soil. In our books, we need the brown stuff, which is the nitty-gritty work, the sketchy outline, the effort of putting it all down on paper. But we also need the green ideas, the twists of plot as our characters surprise us. Then, when the earthworms get to work digesting (rewriting) the whole mess, it somehow turns into the rich soil we were looking for in the first place.

Today, as you are writing, try to imagine the compost pile you're building. Build those layers. And don't forget the earthworms.

ACHIEVEMENTS & ACCOLADES

(Submit all Achievements & Accolades to Fran Stewart, myownship@earthlink.net, 770-682-7483)
Mary Stripling's poem, "Watercolor Mystery," won Second Place in the "Smith Moseley Poetry Contest" at Southeastern Writers Association this summer.

AUGUST BOARD MEETING REMINDER

Please submit any questions or concerns you'd like the board to address to George Weinstein at (770) 552-5887 or gjweinstein@yahoo.com prior to August 27.

***DUES ARE DUE*****

Please go to the last page, complete the membership form, and send in your check for the 2005-2006 term. The membership dues include a discount until September, so you'll save $5 if you join now. Donations to offset the costs of contests, our website, and special events are also appreciated.

CLUB-SPONSORED CRITIQUE GROUP CONTINUES

The Atlanta Writers Club sponsors a critique group at the Village Veranda coffee shop in Alpharetta on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month from 7 to 9 p.m. The next meetings are August 10 and 24. All members and guests are welcome. This group focuses solely on critiquing one another's work. The only rules are as follows:

- 1) Limit of 500 words for the piece to be critiqued
- 2) Bring at least ten copies so others can read along and provide written comments
- 3) Arrive on time and sign up, since only eight people can share their work on a given night

The Village Veranda (678-240-9202) is located at 52-B North Main St. (Hwy. 9) in Alpharetta, on the same block as the Welcome Center. Heading north on N. Main St., turn left onto Church St. and then make an immediate left to access the Village Veranda parking lot. We meet upstairs.

DIRECTIONS TO SANDY SPRINGS LIBRARY

Don't forget that we will meet on the third Saturday of each month, beginning in September, at the Sandy Springs Library Meeting Room at 1 p.m. There are many ways to reach our new meeting location:

From NORTH of the Branch

- via Roswell Road

Turn left onto Mt. Vernon Highway. Stay in the leftmost lane as you go through two traffic lights, since the right lane will veer off at Johnson Ferry Road. After the split with Johnson Ferry, the library is on the right.

- via Georgia 400

From SOUTH of the Branch

- from Buckhead via Roswell Road

Travel about 8 miles on Roswell Road; cross over I- 285. continue 3/4 mile to Mt. Vernon, turn right. Stay in the leftmost lane as you go through two traffic lights, since the right lane will veer off at Johnson Ferry Road. After the split with Johnson Ferry, the library is on the right.

- via I-285

Exit at Roswell Road and head north. Drive north ¾ mile to Mt. Vernon Highway and turn right. Stay in the leftmost lane as you go through two traffic lights, since the right lane will veer off at Johnson Ferry Road. After the split with Johnson Ferry, the library is on the right.

From WEST of the Branch

- via Johnson Ferry Road

Travel east toward Roswell Road. Before you reach Roswell Road, you will encounter the library on your right. If you reach the intersection with Mt. Vernon Highway, you can turn right and enter the library parking lot (again on your right) from that road as well.
